

From Linda’s Desk

Happy Summer! Hope all is well and everyone is planning some fun summer vacations! The industry is doing very well as most of my clients continue to report financial growth and continue to hire due to company growth. Keep in mind, we are in the “lazy” summer months and this typically is a time of the year when things move at a slower pace. If you are looking for a new opportunity, keep this pace in mind as you go through the interviewing process. Contact me first!

Return to Office Space

Today, ideas, businesses and relationships could live completely online, but that is not the direction most companies are headed. We are seeing the swing toward remote work of the first half of the decade back toward in-person gatherings at most work places. Many companies are doubling down on creating environments that invite employees to come together, whether they work onsite or need to connect between jaunts on the road. Good and intentional design improves business development, productivity and employee retention. It also assists in hiring during the interview process. Candidates love to see a thriving office. All being vital to the success of any company.

Noise in the Workspace

The majority of executives and employees report constant noise in their workplace and many say they lack quite space for meetings or to focus. One report says conditions are much worse now than three years ago. It also found that open offices aren’t delivering on collaboration and productivity goals. Instead employees are finding other ways to find quite space and focus . Some employees say they need to take walks outside and 32% say they listen to headphones to focus and block out distractions. Open concepts are welcoming but private areas remain a necessity.
